AAZK Conservation Preservation and Restoration (CPR)

This grant was designed to lend support to a broad range of conservation endeavors. All appropriate applications are considered as to their beneficial impact on species of flora and fauna within defined ecosystems “in situ”, or “ex situ” for captive bred species. The intent of this grant is to promote North American projects and as such, these projects will receive priority where it is appropriate. All projects are encouraged and are eligible based on their compatibility to the CPR grant’s goals. Because of the nature of conservation projects, the scope of the project or number of people involved will not be restricted.

Restrictions:

The committee will not fund invasive biological studies, or any endeavor that may cause any animal undue or prolonged discomfort or harm. Acceptable expenditures include: equipment, supplies and materials. Expenses that are unacceptable include: travel, communication costs, animal purchases and wages for project participants.

Reimbursement Exceptions:

Due to the nature of conservation efforts, advanced monies may be important and can be applied for by contacting the Grant Committee Chair and AAZK Chief Executive Officer. Advance funding applications must be approved by the AAZK Board of Directors who will make their decision after reviewing the proposed budget and framework of the grant application. It is therefore imperative to have a detailed proposed budget account how AAZK funds are to be utilized.
